3.4.5	Hiding in the present	91
3.4.6	Acting upon past transparency	91
3.4.7	Acting upon past opaqueness	92
3.4.8	Being transparent to influence the future	92
3.4.9	Being opaque to influence the future	93
3.4.10	Affordances of the CRM system	95
3.5	Towards a temporal view of the performativity of transparency	96
3.6	Discussion	99
4	It comes back to bite you	103
4.1	Introduction	104
4.2	Theoretical Background	105
4.2.1	Symbolic adoption in institutional theory	105
4.2.2	Taking a structurational approach in the process of institutionalization	108
4.2.3	Symbolic actions in institutionalization	110
4.3	Research Methods	111
4.3.1	Research Setting	111
4.3.2	Data Collection	112
4.3.3	Data Analysis	116

4.4	The case of institutionalizing the CLM model in TelCo	118
4.4.1	Phase 1: Introduction of the CLM model	118
4.4.2	Phase 2: The symbolic adoption expands	121
4.4.3	Phase 3: The CLM model becomes an institutionalized practice	122
4.4.4	Phase 4: Organizational change as an occasion for the CLM model to expand	124
4.4.5	Phase 5: The CLM model expands	124
4.5	The role of symbolic actions in the institutionalization process	126
4.5.1	Symbolic actions influencing the institutionalization process	131
4.5.2	Consequences of the symbolic actions	135
4.6	Conclusions and Discussion	138
5	Discussion	143
5.1	Introduction	144
5.2	Insights from chapter 2: Epistemologies in clash	147
5.2.1	Key findings and response to the overall research question	147
5.2.2	Theoretical implications for the field of knowledge	148
5.2.3	Future research on knowledge collaboration	149
5.2.4	Practical implications	150
5.3	Insights from chapter 3: The performativity of transparency	151
5.3.1	Key findings and response to the overall research question	151
5.3.2	Theoretical implications for taking a performativity perspective to study technology in organizations	152
5.3.3	Future research on analytics and performativity	153
5.3.4	Practical implications	154
5.4	Insights from chapter 4: The unintended consequences of symbolic adoption	155
5.4.1	Key findings and response to the overall research question	155
5.4.2	Theoretical implications for the role of symbolic adoption in institutionalization processes	156
5.4.3	Future research on institutional theory	157
5.4.4	Practical implications	157
5.5	Boundary conditions of the findings	158
5.6	Theoretical implications for the field of rationality and directions for future research	160
5.6.1	Implications for the field of rationality	160
5.6.2	Future research on rationality	164
5.7	Practical implications for the pursuers of rationality	166
5.8	Concluding remarks	167
