6 In-conclusion 282

Chapter Five 285
The impossible possibilities of postmetaphysical God-talk. A conversation between Heidegger, Levinas and Derrida: Theopoetics and Holy Folly

1. Introduction 285

2. In summary: a conversation at the closure of Metaphysics 285

3. The first oblique offering: to be already in the text is to begin with an image, a sign, an inscription. Is there any other beginning? 292

4. The second oblique offering: The impossible possibility of Theopoetics as postmetaphysical God-talk 295

4.1 Theopoetics 296

4.2 Theopoetry and the danger of theopolitics 298

4.3 The temptations in the desert: the temptations in the name of God 300

4.3.1 The first temptation: the all-powerful author 301

4.3.2 The second temptation: conclusive meaning and thus certain knowledge 302

4.3.3 The third temptation: the power of order 303

4.3.4 Last temptation: Final judgment 304

4.4 Theopoetics between Theopoetry and Theopolitics and an exemplary narrative 304

5 The third oblique offering: The impossible possibility of holy folly as a possible postmetaphysical God-talk 315

5.1 Mōrosophia as the third way and alternative to both logos and mythos 318

5.1.1 Folly as the way to wisdom 321

5.1.2 Mōrosophia as the way in postmodernity at the closure of metaphysics 323

5.2 Byzantine Holy Fools and Erasmus' In Praise of Folly 323

5.2.1 Salos on the margins of the early Christian asceticism of the desert monasteries 329

6 Theopoetics (mōrosophia) and Holy Folly (salos): a dance of the impossible possibility 336

7 At the closure of a study 337
