Table of contents

Illustrations vii
Abbreviations viii
Map of Myanmar’s states and regions x
Acknowledgements xi
Preface xv

Introduction: researching civil society in Myanmar 1
The research context: conflict, repression, and human rights violations under military rule 3
Defining the research question 6
Chapter outline and sub-questions 10
Theoretical framework 13
Methodology 28

Chapter 1 – From colonial to military rule in Burma/Myanmar: patterns of repression and resistance 39
British colonialism and the rise of intercommunal tensions 42
World War II: from occupation to an independent Burma 48
Internal and external threats during the brief ‘Parliamentary era’ 49
Dictatorship and economic decline under the BSPP 52
Political developments under the SLORC/SPDC 62
President Thein Sein’s political liberalisation process 70
Conclusion 72

Chapter 2: Civil society, diversity, and contested representation 75
Tracing the ‘civility’ and the ‘societal’ in civil society 78
Civil society in the Burmese context 83
Diversity and fault lines in Burmese civil society 88
Fault line 1: Ethnicity and religion 89
Fault line 2: Generation and gender 99
Fault line 3: Government-organised and independent NGOs 109
Fault line 4: ‘Inside’ and ‘outside’ Myanmar 111
Fault line 5: Elites and grassroots 117
Conclusion 135

Chapter 3: Civil society seeking ‘space’ in Myanmar’s political transition period 139
State-society relations in military-ruled Burma/Myanmar 142
Room to manoeuvre under authoritarian rule 143
‘Contingent symbiosis’ between the state and civil society 156
The contested notion of ‘space’ for civil society in the run-up to the 2010 elections 161
Civil society beyond the overtly political 168
Civil society reactions to recent political change 174
Conclusion 178
Chapter 4 - Framing ‘the situation’ in Myanmar:

transnational advocacy strategies and pathways to change

- Framing and marketing in transnational advocacy campaigns
- Strategic framing efforts
- Encounters between civil society from ‘exile’ and from ‘inside’ the country
- Post-Nargis counter-voices to the democracy movement
- Competing frames around the 2010 elections
- The elections-as-opportunity counterframe
- Lobbying abroad for the election boycott campaign
- Identifying the goals of the election boycott campaign
- Adversarial framing
- Evaluating campaign success
- Conclusion

Chapter 5 – Changing ‘the situation’? The influence of Western donor aid on space for Burmese civil society activities

- Civil society’s reliance on foreign funding
- Expansion and contraction of foreign aid during military rule
- Politicisation of the aid debate
- Western donor interest in ‘democratisation from below’
- Foreign aid reinforcing domestic divisions
- Foreign aid influencing civil society agendas
- The risk of corruption
- Aid dependency and the struggle for financial independence
- Seeking alternatives
- Changing donor policies during quasi-civilian rule
- Conclusion

Conclusion

- Main findings
- Representing civil society
- Identifying civil society under repressive circumstances
- Fostering a vibrant civil society
- Policy recommendations for donors
- Concluding thoughts

References

Summary