Table of Contents

Acknowledgements ix

Chapter 1 Introduction 1
1.1 Foreknowledge and Freedom: Some Initial Observations 1
  1.1.1 Theoretical and Practical Issues 1
  1.1.2 A Preliminary Contour of What Follows 3
1.2 The Analytical Discussion: A State of the Question 3
  1.2.1 Outlining the Problem 3
  1.2.2 The Boethian, Ockhamist, Open Theist, and Molinist Solutions 6
  1.2.3 Some Concluding Remarks on the Solutions 8
1.3 An Intriguing Solution: The Theory of Middle Knowledge 9
1.4 Approaching the Problem: Re-contextualizing the Issue in Its Biblical Context 11
  1.4.1 Outlining the Inquiry 11
  1.4.2 Methodological Considerations 13
1.5 An Overview: Content of Chapters 14

Chapter 2 Middle Knowledge in the 16th-17th Centuries: Luis de Molina 16
2.1 Introduction 16
  2.1.1 Molina’s Role in the Debate 16
  2.1.2 An Outline of What Follows 16
2.2 Scientia Media 17
  2.2.1 Dispute between the Jesuits and Dominicans 17
  2.2.2 Divine Knowledge: Natural, Middle, and Free 20
  2.2.3 Objections Raised in the 16th-17th Centuries 24
2.3 Scriptural Grounds of Molina’s Views 25
  2.3.1 Scriptural Ground of Molina’s Views of Divine Foreknowledge? 25
    a. Psalm 139:3-5 26
    b. Isaiah 41:23 and 48:5 28
    c. Hebrews 4:13 29
    d. John 14:29 31
  2.3.2 Scriptural Grounds of Molina’s Knowledge of Counterfactuals? 33
    a. 1 Samuel 23:6-13 33
    b. Matthew 11:20-24 35
2.4 Evaluation 37
  2.4.1 Theological and Hermeneutical Issues in Molina’s Views 37
  2.4.2 The Role of the Bible and its Relation with Molina’s Views 38
2.5 Conclusion 39
b. “Repenting Texts”
4.6.2 Theological Ground of Evaluation
  a. Divine Prescience
  b. Divine Existence
  c. Providence and the Problem of Evil
  d. Predestination and Freedom
4.6.3 Philosophical Ground of Evaluation

4.7 Conclusion

Chapter 5 The Canonical Approach of Brevard Childs and The Hermeneutical Approach of Anthony Thiselton

5.1 Introduction
  5.1.1 The Role of Childs and Thiselton in this Study
  5.1.2 An Outline of What Follows

5.2 A Description of Childs’ Canonical Approach
  5.2.1 Two Key Assumptions of Childs’ Canonical Approach
  5.2.2 Six Features of Childs’ Exegesis
    a. The Authority of Scripture
    b. The Literal and Spiritual Senses of Scripture
    c. The Two Testaments of Scripture
    d. Divine and Human Authorship of Scripture
    e. The Christological Content of Scripture
    f. The Dialectical Understanding of the History of Scripture
  5.2.3 Childs’ Application of Canonical Interpretation of the Bible
    a. First Avenue: Discerning the Plain Sense of the Text
    b. Second Avenue: An Intertextual Dialogue between the Two Voices
    c. Third Avenue: Discerning a True Witness to the Living God
  5.2.4 Concluding Observations: Canon, Community, and Theological Continuity

5.3 A Description of Thiselton’s Approach
  5.3.1 Hermeneutical Currencies
    a. The Meaning and Scope of Hermeneutics
    b. Philosophy and Hermeneutics
  5.3.2 Biblical Interpretation as the Fusion of Two Horizons
    a. “Engaging” and “Enlarging” Horizons
    b. Multidisciplinary and Interdisciplinary Practices
  5.3.3 Concluding Observations: Hermeneutics, Philosophy, and Doctrine

5.4 Conclusion

Chapter 6 A Possible Theological Appropriation of the Bible

6.1 Introduction
  6.1.1 Where Do We Stand Now?
6.1.2 An Outline of What Follows

6.2 A Possible Theological Appropriation of the Bible
   6.2.1 The Beginning and Ending of the Knowledge of God: The Bible
   6.2.2 Encountering the Living God: The Lordship of the Triune God
   6.2.3 Working towards a Coherent Biblical Vision of God: Creedal Context
   6.2.4 Relating Scripture and Theology: The Larger Context of Bible and Its Method
   6.2.5 Responding with Obedience: Faith Seeking Understanding

6.3 An Overall Evaluation of Molina, Bavinck, and Craig
   6.3.1 The Theological Scope of Scriptural Texts
      a. Psalm 139:3-5
      b. Isaiah 41:23 and 48:5
      c. Hebrews 4:13
      d. John 14:29
      e. 1 Samuel 23:6-13 and Matthew 11:20-24
   6.3.2 The Scriptural Ground of Evaluation
   6.3.3 The Usage and Role of the Bible

6.4 Implications for the Contemporary Debates on Middle Knowledge

6.5 Final Conclusion

Summary

Bibliography