Table of contents

Table of contents	xi
List of figures	xv
List of tables	xvii
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Motivation	1
1.2 Research questions	5
1.3 Structure of the thesis	7
I Macroeconomic effects of flood risk: historical background and modelling	9
2 Do floods have permanent effects? Evidence from the Netherlands	11
2.1 Introduction	11
2.2 Disasters and population dynamics	13
2.3 Historical background	14
2.3.1 Floods and policy: the Dutch case	14
2.3.2 The flood	16
2.3.3 The policy response	16
2.4 Data	18
2.5 Methodology	18
2.5.1 Difference-in-differences with response functions	18
2.5.2 Estimated models	19
2.5.3 Coding of treatment variables	21
2.6 Results	22
2.6.1 The flood model	22

Table of contents

2.6.2	The Deltaworks model	23
2.6.3	The mixed model	24
2.6.4	Stock dynamics from the flood and the Deltaworks	27
2.7	Conclusion and discussion	28
Appendix 2.A	Data	30
Appendix 2.B	Treatment groups	32
3	Incorporating behavioural responses to risk in disaster impact models	35
3.1	Introduction	35
3.2	The economics of natural disasters	37
3.2.1	Concepts and terminology	37
3.2.2	Household migration and risk judgements	39
3.3	Economic disaster impact modelling: current practice	41
3.3.1	Input-Output models	41
3.3.2	Computable General Equilibrium models	43
3.3.3	Limitations of IO and CGE models in disaster impact analysis	44
3.4	Agent-based modelling of household migration under risk and uncertainty	45
3.5	Conclusions and future research challenges	49
II	Flood risk and expectations: housing market dynamics and impacts on mobility	51
4	Flood protection and endogenous sorting of households	53
4.1	Introduction	53
4.2	Literature review	55
4.3	The model	57
4.3.1	Credit markets and flood risk: the real estate agent	59
4.3.2	Households: utility and mobility	61
4.3.3	The effect of property valuations on equilibrium housing prices	63
4.3.4	Interregional migration	64
4.3.5	Welfare effects measured by equivalent variation	65
4.3.6	Parameter values and steady-state targeting procedure	66
4.4	Results	68
4.4.1	Mobility and unemployment	68
4.4.2	Housing consumption and equilibrium housing prices	69
4.4.3	Welfare effects and clustering	70

4.5	Discussion	71
Appendix 4.A	Labour-market dynamics	73
Appendix 4.B	Household maximisation problem	76
Appendix 4.C	Description of variables	77
Appendix 4.D	Solution procedure and stability of the model	77
Appendix 4.E	Sensitivity analysis	78
5	Loss aversion and housing market capitalisation of flood risk	79
5.1	Introduction	79
5.2	The model	81
5.2.1	Risk judgements	82
5.2.2	Household utility and mobility	84
5.2.3	Housing demand	87
5.3	Results	88
5.4	Discussion	90
 III Flood risk and expectations: impacts on regional labour supply and production		 93
6	What if Dutch investors started worrying about flood risk?	95
6.1	Introduction	95
6.2	Methodology	97
6.2.1	RAEM: general description	97
6.2.2	Utility and migration	99
6.2.3	Production and monopolistic competition	100
6.2.4	RAEM: recursive dynamics and capital accumulation	102
6.3	Case-study: the large Rotterdam area	103
6.3.1	Data	104
6.3.2	Simulations and scenarios	104
6.4	Results from the case-study	107
6.4.1	Ex-ante results: changes in labour force, production and unemployment	107
6.4.2	Ex-post results: capital destruction and casualties	108
6.4.3	Ex-post results: welfare losses and tax revenues	108
6.5	Discussion	110
Appendix 6.A	Calibration	113

Table of contents

7	Public concern as a driver of disaster losses	115
7.1	Introduction	115
7.2	The model	118
7.2.1	Risk judgements and household location decisions	119
7.2.2	Individual risk opinions leading to public concern	120
7.2.3	Introducing extremist opinions	123
7.3	Simulations and results	124
7.3.1	Labour supply and production in Rotterdam	125
7.3.2	Labour supply and production in the Netherlands	127
7.4	Discussion	130
Appendix 7.A	Households' location decisions	132
Appendix 7.B	Choice experiment	133
Appendix 7.C	Results ABM	136
8	Conclusions	139
8.1	Overview and answers to research questions	139
8.2	Discussion and relevance for flood risk management	142
8.3	Final remarks and suggestions for future research	144
