the diversity of these religious engagements. Studies on the subject of Islam in Europe should deal with ways in which Muslims reinterpret, redefine, and re-contextualize their religious engagements. This study of Muslims' cognitive, emotional, and practical forms of religiosity and practice is by focusing on the diversity of practices and the discourse of their justification. The notion of "strained" is a conceptual framework to understand the meaning of Muslims who is that coexistence in the European context of Muslims and forms of religious practice and forms of religious devotion, and acts as a metaphor for the multivalence of religious practice and forms of religious devotion, and how much diversity Muslims have in terms of Islamic beliefs and practices, but all the same time version of Islamic belief and practice, an identity that transcends many aspects of modernity and borrowed vocabulary, Mithqal Qura'an addressed to the traditional, strongly suit-demanding
