The link between the sedimentological and petrophysical attributes, and seismic reflections plays an important role in the exploration and production of hydrocarbons. Field-based studies provide insights into the geometries of depositional systems and the small-scale heterogeneities of the sediments. The results of high-resolution outcrop analogous can contribute to the prediction of the characteristics of comparable depositional systems in the subsurface.