Table of Contents

Chapter 1: Introduction ............................................................................... 11
1.1 Setting the scene................................................................................ 11
1.2 Male violence related to changes in the economy and gender relations ................................................................................................................. 14
1.3 The Mexican Riviera: A tourist area in flux ..................................... 15
1.4 Wealth and poverty: Worlds divided ................................................ 17
1.5 Drugs and daily life ........................................................................... 18
1.6 Research focused on men .................................................................. 20
1.7 Main focus of the book and related research questions .................... 21
1.8 Outline of the book ........................................................................... 22
Chapter 2: Theoretical Concepts ............................................................. 26
2.1 Introduction ....................................................................................... 26
2.2 Practice Theory ................................................................................. 26
2.3 A Holistic Approach to Violence ...................................................... 27
2.4 Gender: The Creation of Difference ................................................. 31
2.5 The construction of addiction ........................................................... 37
2.6 Conclusion ........................................................................................ 40
Chapter 3: Issues of Methodology .......................................................... 41
3.1 Introduction ....................................................................................... 41
3.2 Research phases and locations .......................................................... 42
3.3 Positioning in various fields of power .............................................. 44
3.4 The health center ............................................................................... 45
3.5 Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) ........................................................... 46
3.6 Prison ................................................................................................ 47
3.7 Learning to function in the organizational hierarchy ...................... 49
3.8 Research among the lower social classes ........................................ 51
3.9 Challenges for a woman researching violent men ............................ 53
3.10 Various ways of generating knowledge ......................................... 54
Chapter 7: Battles Against Domestic and Sexual Violence: (Inter)national Politics and Reality

7.1 Introduction ..................................................................................... 115
7.2 Mexican politics and the recognition of women’s rights ................ 116
7.3 Domestic violence laws in the state of Quintana Roo ................. 120
7.5 The laws in practice ........................................................................ 135
7.6 Family violence laws in practice ..................................................... 135
7.7 Sexual violence laws in practice ..................................................... 138
7.8 Public awareness of domestic and sexual violence as punishable crimes ........................................................................................................ 140
7.9 Conclusion ...................................................................................... 141

Chapter 8: Migrating to Make a Change and Changing Gender Relations

8.1 Introduction ..................................................................................... 144
8.2 Gendered aspects of migration ........................................................ 145
8.3 Life at a Rancheria in a time of neo-liberal policies: The case of Izmael ........................................................................................................ 146
8.4 Men’s difficulty with women’s increasing freedom ....................... 148
8.5 An unfamiliar judicial system .......................................................... 151
8.6 Experiencing structural violence as an indigenous migrant......... 153
8.7 Going back home to a household in motion ................................. 156
8.8 Disempowerment of men as an explanatory model of violence .... 159
8.9 Patricia: The road to empowerment and victimhood ............... 160
8.10 Challenging male domination ....................................................... 163
8.11 Conclusion .................................................................................... 166

Chapter 9: “Doing Masculinity” in a Mexican Prison

9.1 Introduction ..................................................................................... 168
9.2 Prison: the setting ............................................................................ 168
9.3 Felipe: A background picture .......................................................... 169
9.4 Gaining power through dominance and violence ........................ 172
9.5 Ernesto: A background picture ....................................................... 174
9.6 A trajectory from victim to leader ................................................... 175
9.7 Exacerbating violence under a failing prison system ...................... 178
9.8 Taking control over the prison ......................................................... 180
9.9 Controlling prisoners by giving them something to lose ............... 181
9.10 Prison, a place of structural violence .......................................... 182
9.11 Unsafe surroundings playing into the performance of hegemonic masculinity ............................................................ 184
9.12 Work as the outlet for a masculine performance .......................... 186
9.13 The malleability of perceptions of masculinity .............................. 188
9.14 Conclusion .................................................................................... 190
Chapter 10: Conclusions ................................................................... 192
List of acronyms................................................................................ 201
Literature ........................................................................................... 202
Appendix 1 Research locations and methods ................................. 219
Appendix 2: Questionnaires .............................................................. 222