6 Summary and discussion
6.1 The influence of contextual factors on giving and receiving long-term care
6.2 Macro-micro transitions
6.3 Method
6.4 Context influences the extent to which publicly funded care is an alternative to informal care
6.5 Higher spending on publicly funded home care is linked to fewer people over 50 who provide informal care – especially among those not in employment
6.6 Intrinsic motivations differ between European citizens and are a determining factor in the provision of informal care
6.7 The supply of publicly funded home care and informal care relates mainly to the use of care by males aged over 50 years
6.8 Discussion
6.9 Policy implications
6.10 Strengths and limitations of this study
6.11 Future research
References

Appendix A
Appendix B
Dankwoord
Bibliografie